Make House Painting Easier For You

Painting your house can be a real pain in the neck, the more it becomes of it if you don't know how to do it right. If that is so, what more if you don't know how to paint at all? While people commonly think of house painting as really hard, it actually is not really hard. Yes it is time consuming but hard is something else that you won't have to consider when it comes to this matter. With some tips, you should be able to make house painting easier.

With the many economic issues we are faced with right now, it is best in this situation that we would do a lot of jobs ourselves. House painting, as a considerably expensive service would be much better if you did it yourself. So for you to make house painting easier, here are some tips and tricks you will need.

Be aware that although it is not that hard, house painting would still take a lot of time and effort. You should be able to give what demands the task has for you.

Painting The Indoors

Before you start painting anything inside your house, make sure you fix the cracks and holes in the wall before you apply a layer of paint. Not doing this can cause a lot of problems in the future and more to that, you want your house to look as new as possible when having it painted, having holes and cracks on the wall will not make your house look new at all.

Areas like these can be easily repaired with a vinyl spackling compound which can be seen in most stores that would sell house paint. For large areas, you can fix this with a plaster of a fiberglass compound. Make sure that they all dry up and are evenly spread before applying anything.

Exterior Painting

When repainting the exterior of your house, you are very likely to face things such as paints that are gradually chipping off the wall, cracks and holes. Cracks and holes can be repaired by the same compounds you use on to repair the same issues on the inside and outside of your house. However, you would be needing a different approach when it comes to cleaning the old paint that is gradually chipping off the walls of your house.

When doing this, you can start off by power washing the entire area that is to be painted. This would remove anything in the way and would make it easier for you to paint on later. After that, use a paint scraper to remove any other paints that could be left over. Finish it off by applying some bleach to the area. When all is done and ready, you can begin applying paint.

Choosing Paint

When choosing paint, take note of the notion that with price comes quality. However when it comes to house painting, you could actually end up saving more if you choose the more expensive type since this would take a longer time for it to fade and for you to repaint your house again.

For areas that will be exposed to moisture most of the time such as the kitchen and the bathroom, you can use semi-gloss oil based paint. For other areas, the best type of paint is the 100% acrylic latex. Depending on the material that would be used as a surface for you to paint, you can choose a type of paint that is right for that type.
